

Reflection

The topic I chose was based on the struggles of teen mothers and how they received help. I wasn't really into the topic, but I didn't want to change it. I felt like I could have chosen a better topic to do a research on. For me I wouldn't continue researching on this topic anymore because it wasn't that interesting to me. I felt like my topic wouldn't give me enough results to help support it. With that being said, I just stuck with whatever information I had. With this topic I had a few setback, because I sent out my letters to experts but none of them responded back. I resent them and still none of them replied.

I also had another setback; I had to edit my online survey at least three times and only 16 students responded to the survey. I didn't have much time to make another one and wait for more response so I decided to do at least three interviews. I interviewed a mix of new teen mothers and former teen mothers. I think out of all my sources, my interviews were they strongest. In conclusion, I would not do another research on this topic.
